Description of Classical Culture
The Classical Culture major at UGA focuses less on ancient languages and more on the literature, history, archaeology, art, philosophy, and religion of the Greco-Roman world. For students who elect an emphasis in archaeology the program also offers students archaeological field experience on a classical site. Studying Classical Culture also improves a student’s ability to communicate cross culturally, increases their understanding and sensitivity to different cultures, and broadens their knowledge regarding the world. Career opportunities for graduates include teaching at the secondary level, non-teaching academic positions, journalism, business, museum work, law, library work, editorial work, positions in the travel and tourist industry, and government positions in foreign service.
